A contribution to the morphology of the avian palate. A contribution to the morphology of the avian palate is based on examination of the palates of birds from two genera of galliformes: Sturnus vulgaris and Ardea alba. Emphasis is placed on the comparison of the anatomy of the palatal shelf and Meckel's cartilage of these two types of birds with that of the palate of Aves. This comparison is based on material from the Muséum d'Histoire Naturelle, Paris. The morphology of the Aves palatal arch and the palatal shelf is described and compared.

Some physiological and functional correlates of these morphological features are considered. A table of the laryngeal clefts is presented.
