Field of the Invention This invention relates to a reversible, clampable, one-piece handle which can be assembled, disassembled, and rearranged in two different positions. 2. Description of Related Art U.S. Pat. No. 5,375,855 to McGowan discloses a scissors-type handle that has an outer member which defines the scissors, and a peripheral ring which surrounds the scissors and is secured by a screw to the outer member. The screw is loosened and the ring is rotated relative to the outer member in order to arrange the handle for either right-handed or left-handed use.1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a technique of applying input signals at a timing more delayed than usual to a circuit which is driven by an input clock. 2. Description of the Related Art In a logic circuit, for example, a state of a gate is determined when an input signal is inputted at a timing more delayed than usual.

Therefore, in order to obtain a desired logic circuit operation, it is necessary to set the input delay time in the input circuits of the logic circuit. However, it is impossible to set the input delay time in the input circuits for all input patterns.

The following describes an example of a conventional logic circuit for solving the above-described problem. The prior art will be explained below with reference to
