The width of the v always adds with the height of the h. i.e. if the line height is 20px, the v height and width both adds up to 40px. Can anyone tell me why does this happen? A: It's called the descender, it's default to 1 em for CSS2 and is supposed to be zero. The height and the width of the v character are usually the same: 1 em. (See the figure in the middle) You can remove the descender using: element { font-feature-settings: "liga"; } but this is depending on font. The epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) is an important factor in certain human malignancies. Members of the erbB receptor tyrosine kinase family, including EGFR, HER2 and HER3, have been implicated in cancer. The erbB receptor tyrosine kinase family members are a subgroup of the large receptor tyrosine kinase family. Members of this family share structural motifs and trans-phosphorylation motifs, and all are active in signal transduction. EGFR- and HER2-mediated signal transduction results in changes in gene expression, mitogenesis, and angiogenesis. A number of inhibitors of EGFR have been described, and these have had a variety of names. For example, a
