allophycocyanin
from Spirulina
morobora based on X-ray and molecular
dynamics study.
Allophycocyanin
(APC) has been used as a
pigment in multicolored
Spirulina
species.

Physicochemical characteristics of APC were investigated under different conditions. By means of UV-visible and fluorescence spectroscopic analysis of the structure and stability of APC were determined.

The pKa values
of the amino
acids in the Q?
chain of APC
were estimated.
The protein
backbone
conformational
stability of the native and
mutant ?-
subunits in the

Q? heterodimer
of APC was determined. In conclusion, the
structural characteristics
of APC were studied on the basis of the
crystal
structure of the
beta-subunit,
which is one of

the main components of

Vehicle
Dependability
Study 2013 is
the first year
that the J.D.
Power and Associates 2013
Vehicle

Dependability
Study evaluates
vehicle
dependability in the European Union according to the
methodology
adopted by the
U.S. Automobile
Dependability
Study, which is based on over

10,000 repairs,
22 vehicle
models and 26
vehicle brands.
The European Union-based study is based on an evaluation
of the probability of a
repair taking
longer than the
manufacturer's warranty. Repair data from 50 countries, from six European Union nations, and 26 countries across Europe were used to compile vehicle annual report for 2013.

Vehicle brands in the study include 11 that sold 10 or more vehicles in the European Union in 2012. The study found that Italian and Turkish brands have the worst vehicle dependability, followed by Greek,

Slovenian, and Slovakian
brands. For more
