NEW YORK -- These days, there's no shortage of independent films set to hit movie theaters in September. But beyond the initial rush of films, the true crown jewel in the fall film season seems to be reserved for movies with strong auteur and/or directorial visions -- the sort of films that provide a more intimate and emotional portrait of the filmmaker's craft. Consider the year's first wave of seven features opening on Labor Day weekend: The Fighter, director David O. Russell's adaptation of an autobiographical sports film. Originally expected to premiere at the Cannes Film Festival, this is the New York filmmaker's first film since Silver Linings Playbook in 2012. American Hustle, director David O. Russell's 2013 ensemble comedy about a 1950's-set con/scam in the U.S.

Brooklyn, director John Crowley's stylized, lyrical chronicle of three brothers during an unspecified
