While a bit of a fraction of the station that is around now, it still offers some great programming. In the same way that BBC Radio 4 has created more of a faithful reflection of the station that it used to be, while listening to the old programming on the BBC Radios 2, 3 and 4, one can't help but notice a bit of a drop in quality. 10 things I Hate About So... I had a bit of a rant about the worst / worst of the worst stuff I've come across on the web recently. And that was followed by the news that people I look up to had followed suit, so I figured it was time to cut the shit. If you read this far, you have my undying thanks. 1) Facebook is an absolute abomination. I use Facebook, but I don't like it. It's a great tool for keeping up with friends and relatives, but that's it. I don't like the way you have to share anything at all with people you have no relationship with, and I don't like how everyone seems to think it's a great way to show off what you've got. 2) Using Facebook to find things is a pain. It's the exact opposite of what the web was designed for. But Facebook seems to think that this is a great way to navigate the web. No. I don't like Facebook's UI, its content, or its algorithmic thinking. 3) Most people are idiots. People have been using the web to share photos since the beginning, and they've been spamming their friends and relatives since the beginning. And Facebook's search and discoverability is a complete mess. 4) I don't like how search returns so many results from Pages. I would prefer it if every result that wasn't an exact match came from an actual person. 5) I hate how search doesn't return any results from any of the various search engines. Why isn't there a popular search engine that people would use? Why is Google the de facto way to find things on the web? 6)
